millions of dollars monthly, and if the silver advocates continue to meet with crushing defeats at the elections it is not improbable that an effort may be made to reverse last year's legislation on that point. The interest of the trader in the Far East in American currency legislation lies not in the direction of seeing prices raised, like the Farmers' Alliance, but in the desire to have stability given to the metal in which their transactions with the natives have to be adjusted. It is probably in great measure to the economically false principles of which the issue was argued by the Ohio Democrats that the silver have sustained may be ascribed, for it was not to be expected that the voters at large would support a currency measure represented as likely to benefit one class of the community by raising prices, at the expense of the rest. That bimetalism will prevail in the long run we still believe, but it must be confessed that the present prospect is not encouraging.
